How much do you really love your children?

The Daily Chimpanzee.

I am hearing more and more about these so called vaccines everyday and this new information just gets more and more horrifying.

Certainly, at best children's vaccines are of no benefit what so ever. And I cannot stress the words "at best" strongly enough.

The evidence is overwhelming that vaccines are in most cases an early death sentence for the future.

If you missed the article that I wrote on vaccines you can read it by clicking HERE

Now, if you are a regular reader here you will know that I am forever banging on about the need to educate yourselves.

Vaccines are an excellent example of an area in which I thank Dog that I educated myself .

My education unfortunately came too late to stop my daughter, Stacey from having most of her jabs although thankfully not all.

However, my Clayton has had none and I hope Stacey is shrewd enough to keep it that way – despite pressure from the doctors and health visitor .

You see, the problem we face is that people believe their government and as such cannot believe that they would be involved in something as sinister and evil as population reduction through vaccines... Naive fuckers.

Moreover, because Millions of babies and toddlers are vaccinated without dropping dead or even showing an adverse reaction, makes vaccines appear to be safe and people like myself are written off as being just mentally incompetent, hysterical scaremongers.

Indeed that label would appear justified if I was just asking you all to take my word for it.

Of course, you can count on the fingers of one hand and still have digits left over on the number of times that I have asked you to take my word for anything without having the proof to back it up.

The same cannot be said for our government.

If you want to kill your children slowly, go get them injected with the liquid death. But don't bleat on about how much you love your kids because it doesn't fucking wash.

The truth is, only someone who doesn't give a fuck would vaccinate their kids without educating themselves first.

Especially having already read what myself and many others are saying beforehand.

For a quick and easy to understand overview of what is going on in the world – including a chapter on vaccines – treat yourself to John Hamer's book 'The falsification of history' for Christmas.

There is plenty more information available on my Forum (as well as on my site) which my right hand man Dogman will be only to pleased to lead you to.

And if you still aren't convinced, you can find loads of written testimony about vaccinated children from parents who wished to fuck that they had educated themselves first, by clicking HERE & HERE

Just saying.

"Every day that government health officials lie to the people about vaccine risks is one more day that the public loses a little more trust in what they are told by government. ....MMR vaccine is known to induce brain inflammation and death within 8 to 14 days after vaccination.....They and parents like them are standing up and coming forward to witness what has happened to their babies at the hands of pediatricians who told them that vaccines, including the MMR vaccine, are absolutely safe."

PUBLISHED: 01:46, 14 December 2013 | UPDATED: 01:52, 14 December 2013

Tragedy: Mason Timmins, aged seven, pictured on a family holiday, died from meningitis. The parents of a seven-year-old boy made the heartbreaking decision to switch off his life support machine after he contracted meningitis.

Mason Timmins had been vaccinated against the disease but fell ill last weekend with a rare form and passed away within hours.

His mother Claire, 34, said: 'We're not the type of parents who panic at every cough and snuffle, and I survived meningitis as a child so we were aware of the signs to look out for.'

'He didn't really get any better and we took him to the doctor's as he suddenly became really pale.'

Mason was admitted to hospital, and after tests was transferred for specialist care.

'He had been vaccinated against meningitis but not this particular type, which is a rare type,' she said.

'We knew there was nothing more that could be done for him, we knew we had lost him and we didn't want him messed about with, so allowed his life support machine to be turned off.'

Mason's father Mark, a welder, said: 'I held him until I felt his heart stop beating and we are all grateful we were able to be with him and say goodbye.'

He said of the funeral: 'We asked if the car that carries Mason can speed up a little bit on the motorway, as Mason was always telling us to go "faster, faster".

'It would make me so happy if he knew that we'd done that for him.'

The 47-year-old added: 'We're all mad about motorbikes in the family – his grandad has a Harley-Davidson – and we think as he got older he might have been a mechanic. He was always tinkering away with a spanner in his hand when he got the chance.'

Health officials and parents at Mason's school, Little Bloxwich Primary in Walsall, have met to discuss symptoms and the risk to other children, which is described as very low. Anyone who came into close contact with Mason has been offered antibiotics.

Mason was a pupil at Little Bloxwich Church of England Primary School in Walsall, above

Mrs Timmins, a teaching assistant, stressed: 'We don't want parents to panic about meningitis.

'Please read our story and be aware of the symptoms and get medical help if you feel your child is really unwell.

'But what happened to Mason is rare and people shouldn't forget that.'

There are about 3,400 cases of bacterial meningitis and related septicaemia in the UK every year. One in ten prove fatal.

Symptoms can include a high temperature, severe headache, a dislike of bright lights, a stiff neck, aches and pains, drowsiness and a purple rash of spots or small bruises which do not fade if pressed.

In small babies, a refusal to feed or a high-pitched cry can also be a sign of infection.
