

The evidence is in the bag

The Daily Chimpanzee

Honest to fucking Dog, the cuntry gets more corrupt by the fucking day!

“Police are set to announce that MI6 spy Gareth Williams locked himself in the holdall where he was found dead in August 2010”

To say that verdict is an insult to justice is like saying Derek Laud would make a brilliant child minder.

Why the fuck would he padlock himself inside a sports bag, with the padlock on the outside?

More to the point, how the fuck did he?

Furthermore, the bag – locked from the outside – which contained the Spy’s body was found in his bath in his baking hot flat in the hight of summer with all the windows closed?

Yet the Chimp obviously doesn’t see it as part of their duty as journalists to question the scandalous verdict. The following is how the Cunts reported on the matter:

Now it has emerged that a new review of the case by the Metropolitan Police is likely to conclude that his death was not the result of foul play.

The finding contravenes the verdict of a coroner who last year ruled that Mr Williams, 31, had 'probably' been killed by someone else.

According to the Daily Telegraph, Scotland Yard detectives will say that if it was possible for the codebreaker to climb in to the bag and lock it unaided, there is no reason to suspect any outside involvement.

'It seems as though the coroner made a mistake in ruling out evidence that Williams could not have climbed into the holdall without outside help,' a source told the paper.

Straight away, the fact that the Chimp is using the Telegraph's information sticks out like a hard on in a pair of Speedo's

The Telegraph is after all an MI5/6 controlled newspaper.

Neither is there any point in me stating that Scotland Yard is run by corrupt, lying bastards because I'm positive that you already know that fact based on – if nothing else – their totally unprofessional handling of Operation Paget, Operation Yewtree and Operation Grange... To name but three of many investigations that would have been more thoroughly investigated by Inspector Clouseau.

Scotland Yard must indeed think that everyone in the land is as clueless as they are since they are now saying that following the inquest it has come to light that it would have been possible for Williams to padlock himself in the sports bag.

What the cunts are banking on, is you forgetting or not knowing the fact that at last years Inquest – the last of three as it happens – two experts testified that it was impossible for Williams to get into the bag, zip it up, and padlock the fucking thing.

And how did the experts arrive at this conclusion?

Well the first expert witness tried it 300 times using a fella of the same age, weight and height as Williams.

The second expert witness, whilst obviously lacking the same dedication to the task as the 1st expert witness, never the less still tried it a hundred times using the same method.

Result? Failure to do 400 out of 400 times what we are suppose to believe Williams did so effortlessly on the first attempt ... Pretty conclusive evidence to suggest that Williams was murdered if you ask me.

Even more so when you consider what he did for a living, don't cha think?

Mind you, the fact that there is no photo of the type of bag Williams 'killed himself' in accompanying the article speaks fucking volumes.

You see, it was the type of bag used in the main photo above... You couldn't make that shit up.

However I would suggest that you read the article that I wrote following the inquest last year. Only then will you grasp the magnitude of what the old bill are asking you to believe.

You can read that article by clicking HERE

This is our police force here people... Rotten to the fucking core.

And like everything else in this cuntry, it has to be dismantled and rebuilt from scratch using a different instruction manual.

You know it makes fucking sense.

MI6 spy found dead in a bag 'died in a tragic accident after locking himself in holdall', police will say in official verdict

- Gareth Williams found dead in his Central London flat in August 2010
- 31-year-old's death was ruled to be 'probably' foul play by a coroner
- But Scotland Yard is set to announce that he locked himself in holdall

By HUGO GYE

PUBLISHED: 08:16, 13 November 2013 | UPDATED: 08:16, 13 November 2013

Finding: Police are set to announce that MI6 spy Gareth Williams locked himself in the holdall where he was found dead in August 2010
Police are set to announce today that the MI6 spy found dead in a holdall bag locked himself in and died by accident, it has been claimed.

Gareth Williams' mysterious death has been the subject of fierce speculation since his body was found in his Central London flat three years ago.

Now it has emerged that a new review of the case by the Metropolitan Police is likely to conclude that his death was not the result of foul play.

The finding contravenes the verdict of a coroner who last year ruled that Mr Williams, 31, had 'probably' been killed by someone else.

According to the Daily Telegraph, Scotland Yard detectives will say that if it was possible for the codebreaker to climb in to the bag and lock it unaided, there is no reason to suspect any outside involvement.

'It seems as though the coroner made a mistake in ruling out evidence that Williams could not have climbed into the holdall without outside help,' a source told the paper.

'If it can be demonstrated that Williams was able to climb into the holdall unassisted, then all the other fanciful conspiracy theories start to fall apart.'

A spokesman for the Met refused to comment on the conclusions of the investigation ahead of the official announcement.

Mr Williams, who was found dead inside the locked bag in the bath of his flat in Pimlico in August 2010, is known to have had an interest in escapology.

My stery: Last year a coroner ruled that someone else was involved in the codebreaker's death

Coroner Fiona Wilcox last year ruled that the spy would not have been able to lock himself in the bag and was therefore likely to have died at somebody else's hands.

But within days of the verdict investigators claimed that it was in fact possible for a skilled escapologist to climb in to the North Face holdall and lock it from the inside.

More...

- Standing proudly in front of the Union Flag, first picture of a killer marine fighting to keep his ID secret

Police launched a review of the case following the inquest, over concerns that some evidence had been handled improperly.

The investigation apparently included interviews with senior officials from MI6, where Mr Williams was working on secondment from GCHQ.

Last image: Mr Williams pictured on CCTV at a Tube station shortly before his death

Confirmation that the spy's death was nothing more than a tragic accident could put to rest the various theories which have attached themselves to the case.

It has long been suspected that Mr Williams could have been targeted by foreign agents because of his highly sensitive MI6 work.

Another theory was that the Russian mafia assassinated him in a bid to stop him investigating money-laundering networks.

Others suspected that his death might have been the result of a sex game gone wrong, after it was claimed that he had close links with London's drag and bondage scenes.

Read more:

- Telegraph: Police set to rule out foul play in 'spy in a bag' mystery

Read

more: <http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2505060/MI6-spy-dead-bag-died-tragic-accident-locking-holdall-police-say-official-verdict.html#ixzz2kWLdYQ75>

Follow us: @MailOnline on Twitter | DailyMail on Facebook