

The evil men can do

Chris Spivey

The article immediately below this foreword was first published in the Daily Express in December 2011 and is about Tigers in China being deliberately starved to death... Breathe Christopher, breathe.

However, since this practice was supposedly put to an end in 1993, I don't suppose that there has been any change in the space of just over a year. Course, I betcha didn't know, don't cha know, that after Dogs, Tigers are my favourite animal. I could in fact just sit and watch them for hours. However, in my opinion seeing a Tiger in a photo never really does these truly magnificent beasts justice. They are absolutely huge, powerful, and stunning in their beauty.

Now, anyone who can just stand by and watch any living creature slowly starve to death for no other reason than either, sexual gratification, sadistic pleasure, poverty or – as in this case – financial gain, are not the kind of people that I want to share this planet with. They are soulless and I would – as I hope you all would too -make the punishment fit the crime.

Do you know what? I'm quite proud of myself at the moment. I'm keeping my anger in check... Just about.

Of course, it goes without saying that seeing any living creature starving to death is always harrowing. However, seeing it happen to an animal as beautiful, powerful and majestic as a Tiger is to me, somehow even more so. This then, is truly a case of the evil that men can do... What a sick, sick, arse about face world we live in. It has to stop.

Below that article are a couple more about me old friend, The Duck of Edinburgh and his fondness for shooting Tigers.

Course, it is obvious that the Duck once perceived himself as being a big game hunter. Very much in fact, in the same way that his Grandson and adopted Grandson, Big Willie Rothschild and Harry H Hewitt, now perceive themselves as being James Bond and John Rambo.

Course, since none of the trio are ever in any danger no matter what skulduggery they get up too, the reality of the situation is that they are more Roger Rams Bottoms, Willie Bondage and a big gay cunt-derrrr.

Moreover, since The Duck is the president of the conservation charity the 'Worldwide Fund for Nature', yet sees absolutely fuck all wrong with shooting any moving target with four legs – and no doubt a few with two legs to boot -our strong suspicions about the old bastard are confirmed: The Duck is fucking Quackers.

Never the less, if further proof were needed to re-enforce that fact, which it isn't; I just needed a good start for this sentence, the Help Free The Earth website had this to say:

A few months before the Queen's German husband, Prince Philip, launched the World Wildlife Fund in 1961, he went on a tiger hunt with the Queen. A tiger was lured into range by tethered goats and shot dead by Philip who calls himself a conservationist and environmentalist. Read More

Below the Duck articles, is a brief summary of the Chinese practice of starving Tigers to death, in order to make Expensive Wine from their bones – which we no doubt buy for the Royal Parasites to drink. However, in all likelihood the Tiger Wine Bushiness is probably just a front for the much more lucrative Tiger Skin trade.

Do you know what? Today would be a good day to go to war... I fucking hate cruelty to Animals.

Tigers starved to make wine

from their bones

The Express

TIGERS have been starved to death in Chinese battery farms to make £130 bottles of wine from their crushed bones. Their skins are turned into trophies, campaigners will tell ministers at Westminster next week. At least 11 tigers suffered the agonising death in just one farm last year, according to the David Shepherd Wildlife Foundation's TigerTime campaign. China banned the trade in tiger bone wine in 1993 – but many farmers think this does not apply to animals that die naturally. Shepherd, the famous wildlife artist, said: "It's believed farm owners starve tigers to death to enable them to claim they died from 'natural causes', getting round the few restrictions that are supposed to curb their activities. It is cruel and wicked." TigerTime supporters will meet Foreign Office minister Jeremy Browne next Wednesday to urge him to press China to ban all trade in tiger parts. And it wants people to sign its petition at www.bantigertrade.com.

It's believed farm owners starve tigers to death to enable them to claim they died from 'natural causes', getting round the few restrictions that are supposed to curb their activities. It is cruel and wicked. David Shepherd Campaigner and former model Samantha Fox said: "These revelations are sickening. For just one tiger to be treated this way would be an outrage. Eleven is mind-numbing." All this suffering just so people can have skins as trophies and drink wine made from crushed tiger bones." Joanna Lumley called the farms "barbaric" and the trade in tiger parts "abhorrent". Up to 6,000 tigers are thought to be held on the farms – twice as many as are left in the wild. The prize for the farmers is the lucrative trade in skins – worth up to £25,000 – and body parts for traditional Chinese medicine. Tiger bone wine can sell for as much as £130 a bottle.

Royals' shooting passion draws bad blood

The Independent

Prince reconciles longstanding enthusiasm with role for nature charity

JOJO MOYES

FRIDAY 20 DECEMBER 1996

The Duke of Edinburgh has always found it easy to reconcile his love of blood sports with his position as president of the conservation charity, the Worldwide Fund for Nature. As, apparently, has the charity itself. "Anything that he does in his private capacity is beyond the sphere of our relationship with him," said a spokesman, Javier Arreaza, from the headquarters in Switzerland yesterday.

Anything? "His relationship with us has been very good for conservation. We cannot really begin to hypothesise."

Not that much hypothesis is necessary. Shooting is a long-established favourite pastime of the Royal Family and Prince Philip's total "bag" over the past 30 years stretches over continents, species and runs into mind-boggling numbers.

Figures compiled from press reports by the anti-bloodsports lobby suggest that in Britain alone he has shot deer, rabbit, hare, wild duck, snipe, woodcock, teal, pigeon and partridge, and pheasant numbering at least 30,000.

Prince Philip especially enjoys shooting wild boar on the estates of friends in Germany. On one occasion he and Prince Charles are said to have killed 50 wild boar in a single day.

He frequently invites sporting friends to the Royal Family's 20,000-acre Norfolk estate at Sandringham. In 1993, out shooting for up to four days a week during his seven-week stay, he hit his target of 10,000 pheasant. His shooting parties are estimated to have killed about 150,000 pheasant over the last two decades.

The Duke rarely listens to criticisms of his passion for shooting. In 1961, despite protests from British and Indian politicians, he went ahead with an Indian tiger shoot. On that trip he also killed a crocodile and six urials – a type of mountain sheep.

Although he has bowed to pressure and given up big-game hunting, Prince Philip continues to defend his love of blood sports and has frequently claimed that he is culling and not killing the animals.

But while the Royal Family is prepared to consider change in many areas, its enthusiasm for blood sports remains as much a part of royal life as corgis, speeches and divorce.

The Queen often accompanies the Duke on pheasant shoots. Prince Charles and the Princess Royal have organised competitions in which they lead rival shooting parties.

And it seems the royal passion will not dim with a new generation. Prince William is said to prefer shooting to any other sport, while Prince Andrew took his daughter Beatrice on a shoot when she was six.

In October, the Duke provoked an outcry by declaring shooting “an intelligent leisure activity” for children. He was backing a new book teaching novices about gun handling.

The Duck of Edinburgh & Queen Bizzy Lizzy having a spiffing good wheeze at the publics expense.

Wishing you a very long hospital stay,
Prince Philip!

NOW SHOWING AT THE PALACE THEATRE.

A RIGHT ROYAL FARCE PRODUCTION in ASSOCIATION WITH TAKING THE PISS FILMS.

MURDER IN THE JUNGLE (18)

STARRING: The Duck as the villain & Bizzy Lizzy as the bint

Prince Philip's Nazis At Copenhagen

<:section><http://larouchepac.com/node/12788> December 15, 2009 • 10:28AM

Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, and husband of Queen Elizabeth II, is an evil man and the World Wildlife Fund that he created with fellow Nazi, Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, is an evil organization. We do not have to prove the case again, said Lyndon LaRouche, commenting on the genocide being pushed at Copenhagen. Both historically, and in terms of policies, Prince Philip is a fascist, and there is really no difference today between Prince Philip, Barack Obama and Adolf Hitler. Their policies are genocide.

Prince Philip has talked about “culling the herd” of human population, and openly said he wants to be “reincarnated as a deadly virus” in order to reduce the world’s population. Now, Prince Philip’s Nazis are crawling all over Copenhagen, entrenched in the IPCC bureaucracy, in the Obama Administration, in the British government, and in the NGOs.

Over the last week, LPAC has identified the open calls for genocide at Copenhagen, in press conferences and reports by the UN Population Fund (UFPF), by the “Optimum Population Trust,” by Tony Blair personally, and by Blair’s The Climate Group. The Monarchy is directly steering this murderous Copenhagen Conference, with Prince Charles scheduled to give the opening keynote to the Copenhagen Conference on Tuesday, Dec. 15. On Nov. 3, 2009, Philip convened the meeting of the Alliance of Religions and Conservation held at Windsor Castle. All of the leading organizations that are putting population reduction forward at Copenhagen are directly tied to Philip and the WWF.

OPTIMUM POPULATION TRUST: The group which is advocating killing 3-5 billion people by 2050 and which released a new report putting “population reduction” as #1 priority for Copenhagen, is a decades-old organization linked to the WWF and Prince Philip. OPT is one of the “partners” of the “Global Footprint Network,” which every two years issues a “Living Planet” joint report with the WWF. The “Pawprint” Network argues that “since the late 1970s, humanity has been in ecological overshoot” (see EIR, Nov. 7, 2008).

OPT was created in 1991 because of the failure of successive British governments to enact the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Population of 1949 (!) which warned of the dangers of overpopulation.

In 2007, the OPT published a report called “Youthquake,” in which they said, “compulsory limits on births may become unavoidable...” because otherwise, “Might humanity have to suffer the kind of death-dictated control to achieve stabilisation, or reduction by a population crash—a massive cull through violence, disease, starvation or national disasters—which biology dictates for all other species when their numbers exceed the limits of their environments carrying capacity?”

Key OPT personnel include more than a dozen well-known enemies of humanity, including: Patron, Paul Ehrlich, the genocidal maniac who wrote The Population Bomb, and who tutored Al Gore in population control (see EIR, July 9, 1999); Patron, Jonathon Porritt, former Chair of the U.K. Sustainable Development Commission, and chief advisor on climate change to both Prince Charles and Gordon Brown. Porritt gave the Copenhagen press conference ten days ago at which OPT called for cutting the U.K. population in half, to 30 million. He advises the Brown government and the Crown as chairman of the Sustainable Development Commission (SDC) created by the Blair government; Patron, Sir Crispin Tickell, former U.K. Permanent Representative to the UN Security Council.

Tigers starved to make wine from their bones

TIGERS have been starved to death in Chinese battery farms to make £130 bottles of wine from their crushed bones.

Their skins are turned into trophies, campaigners will tell ministers at Westminster next week. At least 11 tigers suffered the agonising death in just one farm last year, according to the David Shepherd Wildlife Foundation's TigerTime campaign.

China banned the trade in tiger bone wine in 1993 - but many farmers think this does not apply to animals that die naturally. Shepherd, the famous wildlife artist, said: "It's believed farm owners starve tigers to death to enable them to claim they died from 'natural causes', getting round the few restrictions that are supposed to curb their activities. It is cruel and wicked."

By John Ingham
Environment Editor

TigerTime supporters will meet Foreign Office minister Jeremy Browne next Wednesday to urge him to press China to ban all trade in tiger parts. And it wants people to sign its petition at www.bantigertrade.com.

Campaigner and former model Samantha Fox said: "These revelations are sickening. For just one tiger to be treated this way would be an outrage. Eleven is mind-numbing.

"All this suffering just so people can have skins as trophies and drink wine made from crushed tiger bones."

Joanna Lumley called the farms "barbaric" and the trade in tiger parts "abhorrent".

Up to 6,000 tigers are thought to be held on the farms - twice as many as are left in the wild.

The prize for the farmers is the lucrative trade in skins - worth up to £25,000 - and body parts for traditional Chinese medicine. Tiger bone wine can sell for as much as £130 a bottle.

A starving tiger languishes in a cage at a bear and tiger farm at Guilin in China's Guangxi Zhuang region

Further research is being done on several other key institutions that are directly involved with Nazis Tony Blair and Prince Philip: The Climate Group, and the notorious Summit of Religious and Secular Leaders on Climate Change meeting that was convened by Prince Philip at Windsor Castle on November 3, 2009.

The Premier of China, Wen Jiabao has publicly stated that he is committed to saving the wild tiger. (Read his comment – Nov 2010) However, his government is allowing trade in tiger skins from tiger farms and skins taken before poaching was outlawed. This trade is acting as a smokescreen for skins taken by killing wild tigers. If China does not stop this trade, the wild tiger is doomed. See how they obtain the tigers and more tiger farm images

